

Calling a quality education for Georgia students “a fundamental right” and “a critical component of building a stronger future for our country,” Congressman John Barrow (GA-12) today donated more than 100 books to Segoo Middle School in Augusta. The books were previously housed at the Library of Congress in Washington, DC.

“Ensuring that every child has access to a quality education is a fundamental right in our society,” Congressman Barrow said while at Segoo Middle School. “These young folks are the leaders of tomorrow, and providing them the tools they need to succeed – like these books – is a critical component of building a stronger future for our country. I’m extremely pleased to be able to offer these books to Segoo Middle School and know that they will be put to the absolute best use possible.”

Congressman Barrow requested the books from the Library of Congress through its surplus book program, which makes books available to educational institutions and other public entities at the request of a Washington representative.
